Connection to the Future

Alumni Association helps graduates find employment

HAROLD G. DOWNS
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Graduates can use the SIU Alumni Association to help them find future employment through alumni contacts, one association official says.

"We on occasion have used our contacts," Executive Director of the Alumni Association Ed Burger said. "The key is to assure us that you are a top notch student."

Alumni in top positions have hired former SIU students, he said.

"There is a loyalty factor out there," Burger said.

If students or alumni approach him requesting help in finding jobs, Burger said he will assist them in whatever ways possible. One method includes encouraging students to join the Externship Program, where students take jobs during spring break to gain experience.

Burger said this year's program was especially successful.

"Just a few weeks ago, we placed 208 students in over 180 placement opportunities," Burger said. "Sixty-six of those were alumni-related."

Members receive Alumnus magazine, a quarterly publication consisting of alumni updates and activity schedules. Members also receive discounts at the University Bookstore, local shops, car rental agencies and restaurants. There are also several activities and events throughout the year aimed specifically at Alumni Association members.

Membership dues support about 70 to 75 percent of alumni programs and services, Burger said.

Greg Scott, an assistant director of the association, estimates SIU alumni are located in 126 countries around the globe. They receive alumni information through press releases, publications and word of mouth, Scott said.

"People find out about things in a variety of ways," Scott said.

Burger said membership has grown by 1,000 students this year alone. Overall, alumni number more than 100,000 people.

The association has existed since 1896. Undergraduate students can join the association for $15 for one year. Regular yearly dues are $30, with discount packages available for alumni spouses.

SHOW AND TELL, COLLEGE STYLE

Hey freshmen and sophomores, do you cringe when you think back to when you were a high school kid? Do you wish you knew then what you know now? Don't worry; everybody does.

You've learned a lot in your first few semesters of college, both about academics and about yourself. When you run into younger friends back home you probably have a lot to tell them about choosing a college, a major, and other secrets to survival at college.

Here's a way to capitalize on your experience and hone several winning characteristics, including flair and communication. Go back and speak at your high school. That's right, arrange with the guidance department back home to put on a presentation about your college experiences. Tell students about the application process, dorm life, picking a major and all of the other things high school students know nothing about. This is a service both to the students and to yourself - you'll be able to use this as a success story when you interview for jobs.

While you're at it, think big. Bring in several of your old friends to present with you, perhaps describing advantages of large and small schools, or living on campus versus commuting. Include photos or video from college, or show your school's web site. Recruit volunteers to continue the program the following year. Most high schools would be delighted to have a former student set up this kind of program. If your school already has such an event, volunteer to participate and make recommendations to improve it.

Doing a high quality job with this project will take some preparation. Consider pitching the idea to your high school this spring, preparing during the summer, and running the actual event in the fall. That's good timing for high school seniors in the application process, and allows you enough time to do it right.

This is one resume builder that can really be a lot of fun.

Higher education a must for future success in life

DEGREE: As years go by, more and more employers look for students with master's.

KELLY E. HERTLEIN
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

In today's society, higher education is proving to be a necessity within the work force. Acting Dean of the Graduate School Richard Falvo says a master's degree may be pertinent to the future of many students.

In previous years a high school diploma was the only form of education needed for an entry level position. However, times have proven to require that most applicants receive a bachelor's degree from a four-year university.

"Some people have projected that in so many years a high school degree, which we thought was essential would be obsolete," Falvo said. "Then it became a college degree and in some areas, especially in technical areas and some others, a graduate degree will be essential in getting a job."

There are several reasons a student may wish to continue their education. Falvo said most graduate students wish to go further into a field to consider a career in research and/or teaching.

Another reason why students decide to pursue a graduate degree is that some employers require education beyond a bachelor's.

"The higher education requirement is becoming true in more and more fields," Falvo said. "Teacher's are required in some length of time to obtain a master's and most principals now around the country are having to obtain an Ed.D or Ph.D."

"Nearly every field, whether it be psychology, education—even in the sciences especially—to get an entry job into government or other types of laboratories require an advanced education beyond the bachelor's."

A new program may help assist students making the decision to seek a higher level of education in less time and for less money. Falvo supports the program as it is in the process of implementing the criteria into the SIU curriculum.

"Some universities are going to this, which I've tried to push here. Departments are going to work together to offer a five-year degree, meaning that a student come in as a freshman and within five years obtain both a bachelor's and a master's degree."

Two units on campus, Computer Science and Business and Administration, are actively working on the program for students.

Falvo said it is not only an advantage for the students enrolled in the programs, but it is also a terrific recruitment tool for the University.

With more than 80 graduate programs, students have the choice of receiving a master's or doctoral degree in nearly any area desired. Peter Riley, coordinator of the Interactive Multimedia Program, said the diversity and personal achievement are important aspects of every degree obtainable.

"I would always encourage everyone to add to or raise their level of education," Riley said. "Interpersonal growth is an important aspect that can happen with any graduate degree."

Falvo said each department has its own objectives and goals, and the success of each department relies on the accomplishments and attitudes of the students incorporated.

"Some students view graduate school as an additional step on a career ladder, as an advantage over competition and as a more defined career goal," Riley said. "What we are trying to do is send qualified students to work in multidisciplinary training and allow them to obtain a very well rounded education so that they may travel or go to any job inquiry and have the required criteria on hand."

FOLLOW-UP WITH SUBSTANCE

The job interview goes well. You feel like you made a connection with the interviewer.

But then, on your way out, you notice she has six more interviews scheduled after yours. How will she possibly remember you five hours later, or the next day, when she decides whom to invite back for the second round? What can you do to help her remember the positive aspects of your interview?

The realities of modern technology have made the old fashioned snail mail thank you note a relatively ineffective tool. On the other hand, fax, e-mail and Internet technologies open the opportunity to make a very memorable impression after the interview ends.

If nothing else, you can fax a quick note of thanks to your interviewer so it is waiting for her in her office. A more memorable choice may be to use the Internet to find additional information on some topic that came up in the interview. If you interviewed for a job in the medical supply field, you could e-mail excerpts from a current article on the cost of health care. In the investment field, coherent comments about recent stock market results may cause the interviewer to move your resume to the top of the stack. Likewise, the latest news on an innovative product may be interesting to a consumer goods manager.

This follow-up effort can be quite time consuming and unproductive if you're not an experienced Internet user. The more you know about landing timely and relevant information through news media and industry web sites, the more ways you have to impress a potential employer, both during and after the interview. This is one of the Winning Characteristics all employers seek. This is a great way to demonstrate it.

Remember, technology provides some great new ways to say "thank you."

Choosing your own path

Some graduating students find work in jobs unrelated to degree

DANA DUBRINNY
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Following graduation, some students choose the 9-to-5 route, while others, such as Bill Schmick, explore options that do not pertain to their bachelor's degrees.

Schmick, a graduating senior from La Grange, is planning to pursue a new path in marine wildlife—a far cry from his chosen field of aviation maintenance.

"In June, I'm going to fly out to San Diego, and with my connections, hopefully get a job at Sea World," he said. "Since I'm going to be hitting the real world, I'm going to endeavor my own way."

Schmick has been at SIUC for seven years because of his constant change in direction over the years. He began in administration of justice, changed his major to zoology and finally completed his training in aviation maintenance.

"I decided a year and a half ago that I didn't want to do anything in aviation, but since I've been here so long, I wanted to just finish what I started," he said.

"I lost all interest in my major because I spent way too much time learning that there was no adventure in what I was doing. I got burnt out in aviation."

Though Schmick has more loans to pay off than he bargained for, he has no fear of working extra hard to pay them back while in San Diego.

Like Schmick, Cori Stewart, a graduating senior from Glen Ellen, also decided to take a different route after graduation. She plans to move to either Africa or Italy to stay with family and hunt for a job off the career path of her philosophy degree.

"I'm going to travel around the world for five years, then I plan to get a Ph.D. in holistic healing," she said. "Then I want to open a spa for herbal healing, acupuncture, yoga and massage therapy."

Stewart admits that she will need to save a bit of money before her traveling excursion, but she has no apprehension in working as a waitress for a couple of months.

"I want to save about $5,000 before I leave," she said. "If I work as a waitress for a couple of months in the suburbs of Chicago, I can get ridiculous tips and earn enough to start my venture."

Stewart realizes the chance of getting a job with a philosophy degree are basically limited to teaching unless the person's mental capacity rivals that of Plato or Socrates.

Despite abandoning of her major, Stewart anticipates a new career path without regret toward the time she spent at SIUC.

"One thing I can say about school is that I loved all my classes," she said. "How often can you say that?"

A gift for a lifetime of change

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

In the next few months almost 5 million students will graduate from high school and college. While graduation marks a time of achievement, ceremony and success, it also marks one of the most significant adjustments in both the lives of young adults and parents alike.

Whether the graduate is pursuing a job or additional education, graduation means change. It also means facing the unknown, and often separation from friends and family. In today's rapidly changing world, graduation means putting aside a period of relative stability and entering a world of constant change.

How can parents and loved ones help new graduates prepare for such changes? Give them the principles of worth, trust and a positive attitude toward change.

WORTH. First, reinforce the idea that every person has worth, and that it begins with believing in oneself. We need to applaud our graduates and let them know how talented, special, and important they are.

Valparaiso University Coach Homer Drew is a human ideal for promoting worth of others. During the recent NCAA basketball tournament, the collegiate "hoosiers" surprised the country by upsetting both 10th-ranked University of Mississippi and Florida State. Coach Drew's belief in the worth of his players was reflected in his court-side manner of cheering and encouraging them during every minute and every possession.

Even after they finally were defeated by Rhode Island, the players talked about their relationship with Coach Drew and the "positive, uplifting impact he had on them." Without Homer's belief in the worth of every player it is hard to believe that Valparaiso would have been one of the final 16 teams in the NCAA.

In addition to building self-worth as Homer Drew did with Valparaiso, let your graduates know that you believe that all other people have worth.

TRUST. Second, help them understand the power of trust. Being trustworthy can help foster immediate friendships and relationships.

Employers seek electronic resumes

E-RESUME: Job hunters must make a favorable impression for the human, electronic eye.

JONATHAN PRESTON
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

A well organized resume has always been an important part of obtaining a job after graduation, but in this technological age a new electronic resume is just as important as a traditional one.

Many students overlook the need for a good resume in their search for employment after graduation. A resume is the first thing an employer usually sees. It shows what a prospective employee has to offer a company and provides a first impression for the employer. A poorly constructed resume may leave an equally poor impression on the employer.

Karen Hayes, a Career Services specialist, said that an employer usually looks at a resume for an average of 60 seconds, so a resume should be clear and easy to read.

"Sentences and paragraphs should be kept short," she said, "but the most important part of the resume is the career objective."

Along with this career objective, statements about honors received while in school as well as a list of activities and related work experience should take precedence in the resume as well, she said.

Students should be making two resumes — one for the human eye, and for the electronic eye.

KAREN HAYES
SPECIALIST, CAREER SERVICES

Developing a good resume has never been an easy task, and as if the traditional resume was not enough, many seniors now have to worry about developing an electronic resume as well.

Hayes has been urging students to look into the electronic resume. "Students should be making two resumes," she says "one for the human eye, and one for the electronic eye."

A recent survey by the International Association for Human Resource Information Management states that more than 30 percent of companies that responded to the survey have automated their recruitment process in some way.

The rules for an electronic resume are just about the same as a traditional one. The two main things a student needs to remember when organizing an electronic resume is to use more nouns than verbs, and to keep it simple.

Computers pickup certain words that are typed in on a resume like clerical, mathematics, and Microsoft Word. The easier the language, the easier it will be for the computer to pick key words.

Regardless of whether or not it is an electronic or traditional resume, grammar rules must be followed.

As a last word of advice Karen Hayes suggests students: "list all the experiences that a person has that pertain to the job being considered. Employers are not looking for obvious duties but what skills were acquired and how you got them. They are looking for a person who takes on increasing responsibility and stayed with it."

A First Impression

Do	Don't
• Spend time listing all your good qualities. This is where you get credit where credit's due.	• Leave out the objective.
• Include a job objective, clearly and concisely. Focus your resume on your future objective to show the employer 'where I am going' not 'where I have been' or 'where I am now.'	• Include material or history not related to the job objective.
• Include experience and skills already related to the job objective.	• Use long, repetitive explanations.
• Start each sentence with an action verb.	• Include personal history.
• List related experience, paid or unpaid, including experience from school activities and committees such as organizing fund raising events.	• Presume the personnel screener understands skills included in job titles — tailor your job description.
• Research the position and the company before the interview.	• Take a for granted skills that you perform well as a matter of course.
• Contain your resume to one or two pages.	• Replace a job description with a job title — it's not self explanatory.
• Follow the interview with a personal thank-you letter.	• Forget to include your GPA if its 3.5 or better.
	• List references from whom you have not received permission or positive response.
	• Send a 'form' thank-you letter.

One-third of students intern for invaluable experience

Kirk Mottram
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

Over the last 18 years, the ratio of students engaging in internship work has gone from 1-in-36 to 1-in-3, according to a recent survey. Toby Trimmer, a senior in political science, says this is because internships provide experience unattainable in classrooms.

Trimmer is completing an internship for class credit with the Barb Brown for State Senate campaign, a position that has led to another job in the world of campaign politics.

The bespectacled Nashville liberal has spent the last five years of his life sitting in classrooms, gleaming the wisdom of his political science professors. Though he enjoys the polemics of the classroom, he has always yearned for something else, something more hands-on. This year he got what he's always wanted: an internship.

Trimmer, who volunteered for the 1996 Brown campaign, now spends the majority of his out-of-class time fielding phone calls in the Brown campaign office in Carbondale, attending to pre-Labor Day campaign tasks. Trimmer says he loves the fast-paced world of politics and the zero-sum game that is the American campaign.

Though SIUC does not offer a campaign management program, Trimmer says internship work has served as an insightful substitute. Now that Trimmer will finally graduate from this institution, he looks forward to a prosperous career in the field of political gamemanship and campaign strategy.

"I think the internship is 10 times more valuable than class," he said. "I've learned a lot about campaigns and elections in this state, stuff I wouldn't be getting anywhere else."

Trimmer's scenario is becoming more and more common among college students according to a recent study conducted by the National Society for Experiential Education. The study concludes that last year 1-in-3 students completed some form of internship work. Compared to 1980 when only 1-in-36 students interned, this number suggests the popularity of such work is skyrocketing.

Karen Benz, University Career Services specialist, argues internships are becoming so widespread that interning is almost an assumed course. Many employers and graduate schools now expect applicants to have completed some form of internship experience. Furthermore, undergraduate schools across the country are installing required internship programs to be completed before graduation.

Though SIUC is not one of these schools, Benz says it is best for students who are thinking about interning to do the work during their sophomore or junior years so that contacts can be made.

Benz also says internships, like in Trimmer's case, can be instrumental in acquiring full-time work upon graduation.

"If the student does well, many times an internship will lead to a real job," she said.

Graduate students to enter favorable job market

SUCCESS: SIUC students to encounter market that might be better than last year.

PAUL WLEKINSKI
DAILY EGYPTIAN REPORTER

SIUC graduates are entering a favorable job market the second consecutive year, a career specialist said.

James E. Scales, director of University Career Services, said he has seen small increases in the last four to five years in the job market for entry-level positions, but he has seen a significant increase in the past two years.

"The market is even better this year," Scales said. "The Stock Market has been booming and mergers of larger corporations can be blamed for this. Significant downsizing of upper management positions has allowed middle management and bottom management to move up creating openings in entry-level management."

For the second consecutive year, the areas of business, engineering and education continue to be strong in job placement, Scales said.

Judy Eaton, a career service specialist for the College of Engineering, said this year is just as good as last year.

"This year is just as good as last year, if not better," Eaton said. "It has been unbelievable."

Eaton said companies hiring include Motorola, Lucent Technologies and McDonnell Douglas Corp.

SIUC doubled the number of engineering firms visiting campus from 22 from a year ago to 47 this year.

The number of school districts to visit SIUC nearly doubled this year to 37.

"There were three school districts here from as far as Virginia, Texas and Kansas," Scales said.

Scales said that although business, engineering and education majors are strong in job placement, there are other opportunities in other areas.

"Computer science is always there with the upswing of technology," Scales said. "Liberal arts majors have seen 33-percent increase in middle management training."

Mary Payne, a career service specialist for the College of Agriculture, agreed this year's job market is just as strong as last year's.

"If you are willing to go anywhere," Payne said, "anyone can get a job."

Scales said the striking trend shows that employers are looking for students with one to two years internship experience.

Students should begin internships after their sophomore and

"Ninety percent of those will be hired by someone," Scales said.

Scales said students who take advantage of University Career Services have an advantage over other students. Approximately 6,000 students will graduate, but only 1,800 have registered, Scales said.

"About 6,000 students will graduate on May 8," Scales said. "Most of those will begin looking for jobs May 9. About 500 to 600 will come back after graduation — by then it is too late."

"Some students have the idea that they can pick up the Chicago Tribune or St. Louis Post-Dispatch and find a job," Scales said. "Higher paying firms advertise job openings in journals that the best students read. That's not the students job, that's our job."

Students should enroll in the University Career Services as early as their freshman year. Students should be tuned in to what the trends are in their field.

During students' junior year, the service will teach how to properly write resumes and schedule mock interviews to show them what the employers are looking for, Scales said.

On the first day of the senior year, the job search begins. It may take up to nine months to match the student with the job they are looking for, Scales said.

"Many employers are interviewing many different job candidates from a number of different schools," Scales said. "Most will not make a decision until February or March."

The market appears to be strong for the next couple years for business, engineering and education majors, Scales said.

"I had more jobs to fill than I had students," Eaton said.

Look out graduates, it's a different world out there

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

For those of you who are graduating and heading into the business world, you'll want to start preparing yourselves for an environment that's considerably different from the one you're leaving. I'm speaking about the change from answering to professors to answering to bosses — there's a clear difference between a student/professor relationship and employee/employer relationship.

Though they both have considerable influence on your future and your development as a person, professors and bosses serve very different roles. It will benefit you a great deal to head into this new relationship with a thorough understanding of what to expect.

Your employer is paying you for the productivity you contribute to the company. Unlike a professor, your superior has a responsibility to make sure you are doing your part to help the company remain (or become and then remain) profitable. As part of the deal, it's understood that the company will influence you to be the best possible employee you're capable of being.

Ideally, it will force you to work within the company's established way of doing business, while at the same time encouraging you to be an independent and free-thinking person bringing new ideas to the job.

As a result, your superiors have to be commanding, yet at the same time nurturing. The best bosses accomplish this balance with ease, and they're a pleasure to work for. Unfortunately, you're not allowed the luxury of picking bosses. Part of being a responsible and mature employee is learning to make certain sacrifices, and this includes dealing with a superior's shortcomings.

You may find yourself having to answer to two superiors who have differing views on how work should be done. This can present an awkward situation, but it can sometimes work as an advantage, too. As long as their different methods don't completely work against one another, the variety can be refreshing for you.

An advantage a worker/superior relationship has over a student/professor one is that you're often afforded a greater chance to "bond" with your boss; you're with your boss for considerably more time than you're with any single professor as a student. This allows both of you to learn a lot about one another, and this familiarity can be a great help in the job you perform daily and, on the longer term, in your career.

A professor's responsibility is to guide you through difficult tasks.

With a boss, you're expected to work more independently and figure things out for yourself. Though this may seem daunting at first, it's a skill that's important and valuable. And remember this: Perhaps the most useful thing your boss can teach you is how to be an effective boss when it's your turn.

'98 supply of college graduates in demand

COLLEGE PRESS SERVICE

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — It's spring, you're a college graduate and you're going home with no job and a degree that cost more than your Mom or Dad's salary.

Wake up. It's only a bad dream.

Career counselors at area colleges say the job market is strong and that is being reflected on college campuses.

Campuses are reporting significant increases in the number of employers using college career fairs and on-campus interviews to fill jobs. In February, so many employers booked slots at the College of William and Mary's Career Fair in the University Center that the school had to turn people away.

"We just couldn't fit anymore. There's a balcony on the third floor that connects Chesapeake and Tidewater rooms. We had to stuff employers in there," said Leo Charette, director of Career Services at William and Mary.

"It is a broad trend. I would say it's very significant," said Tom Wunderlich, associate director of the Career Management Center at Old Dominion University.

When employment declined five years ago, on-campus recruiting at smaller colleges suffered, Charette said.

Employers stopped visiting. Students' interests and available jobs didn't match. Students wanted to work for the government or a nonprofit agency, but banks and insurance companies showed up to take resumes.

Charette said, the business sector now is still stronger than government or non-profit agencies. But he said employers are looking at majors of every kind, and fields like education are strong.

 IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT **

Plant and Service Operations has decided that effective May 4, 1998 the Physical Plant responsibilities of the Work Order Control and Central Control offices will be consolidated into a single Facilities Operations Center (FOC) located at the Power Plant (formerly Central Control). The FOC may be contacted to initiate all Physical Plant requests for services including:

- Building Services (Custodial)
- Building Maintenance
- Engineering Services
- Grounds

As the diagram below indicates, initial requests for service can be submitted via telephone, fax, campus mail, or Plant and Service Operation's web site.

*Source: Morningstar, Inc., January 31, 1998. Morningstar is an independent service that rates mutual funds and variable annuities. The top 10% of funds in an investment category receive five stars and the next 22.5% receive four stars. Morningstar proprietary ratings reflect historical risk-adjusted performance and are subject to change every month. They are calculated from the account's three-, five-, and ten-year average annual returns in excess of 90-day Treasury bill returns with appropriate fee adjustments, and a risk factor that reflects performance below 90-day T-bill returns. The overall star ratings referred to above are Morningstar's published ratings, which are weighted averages of its three-, five-, and ten-year ratings for periods ending January 31, 1998. The separate (unpublished) ratings for each of the periods are:

 IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT **

Plant and Service Operations has decided that effective May 4, 1998 the Physical Plant responsibilities of the Work Order Control and Central Control offices will be consolidated into a single Facilities Operations Center (FOC) located at the Power Plant (formerly Central Control). The FOC may be contacted to initiate all Physical Plant requests for services including:

Building Services (Custodial)
Building Maintenance
Engineering Services
Grounds

As the diagram below indicates, initial requests for service can be submitted via telephone, fax, campus mail, or Plant and Service Operation's web site.

Think You Can Manage...

That's the average annual sales of a Walgreens store. If you've ever thought of managing a business, Walgreens is a great place to start. The #1 pharmacy retailer in the country is averaging almost five new stores a week. That means opportunity for ambitious, forward-thinking individuals. You could be running a $5 million business within 2-5 years.
